India witnessed a surge in the number of its casual dining and quick service restaurant outlets over the past several years. International and domestic brands are expanding their operations and newer brands are flowing into the opportunities the market presents. Sources encourage U.S. companies and suppliers to explore whether shifting consumer trends and the growth in this sector create a market opportunity.
General Information:
Market Overview of Restaurant Growth
India has witnessed a sizeable shift in its casual dining restaurant (CDR) and quick service restaurant (QSR) sector. CDRs and QSRs have gone from largely serving Indian snacks to now serving western foods with an Indian flavor. The size of the Indian food service industry is approximately $38.6 billion (INR 247,680 crore) as of 2013 and is projected to grow to approximately $63.6 billion (INR 408,040 crore) by 2018.

The restaurant sector in India is divided into the organized and unorganized market. The unorganized international-style market includes roadside vendors, vans and trolleys serving Chinese and Italian-style foods. The organized sector includes QSRs, CDRs, pubs, bars, clubs and lounges (PBCL), and food court kiosks. In terms of market segments, QSR and CDR formats account for 74 percent of the total market, while cafés make up 12 percent, and fine dining and PBCL comprise the remaining 14 percent.

Consumer Demographics and Expenditure Trends
Thirty-two percent of India’s 1.2 billion population is classified as urban. The share continues growing and has led to tremendous growth in the fast food sector. The sector is expected to grow from its current value of $1.1 billion to $4.2 billion by 2020. Nearly 65 percent of the population is under the age of 30 and are actively joining the workforce which has led to steady growth in per capita income levels. India’s monthly per capita income was $145 (INR 8,719.80) in 2014, up by 12 percent from 2013 (see Chart 1, below).

With a “young” population, a high rate of urbanization, rising disposable incomes, increased participation of women in the workforce, increased exposure to western cuisine and needs for elevated protein consumption, industry sources envision growth within the fast food and restaurant sector. Consumers appear willing to experiment with new foods that complement their changed lifestyles. Food and non-alcoholic beverages account for 29 percent of total per capita consumer expenditure (see Chart 2, below).

Changing Lifestyle Trends and Changing Menu Offerings and Flavors
Eating out which once used to be occasion driven, is now becoming the norm for necessity and comfort on weekdays and weekends for a growing number of dual income households as well as the younger population. According to the National Restaurant Association of India (NRAI), 50 percent of the population is eating out at least once every three months. Moreover, according to NRAI information, the population in bustling metros is dining out eight times a month as compared to the United States (14 times), Brazil (11 times), Thailand (10 times) and China (9 times).

Consumer preferences and tastes have also seen a transition from traditional Indian foods to international cuisines like Italian, Chinese and Mexican (many of which still incorporate Indian taste profiles). Also, international brands have adapted their menus to offer Indian flavors to capture Indian consumers and align with cultural practices. For example, McDonalds introduced a potato patty burger, the McAloo Tikki, and a curd cheese burger, the McPaneer Tikka. KFC introduced Vegetarian Strips and Krispy Kreme, which entered India in late 2013, launched “filter coffee” to go with its glazed donut offerings. Also, many bakery brands cater to the vegetarian population by offering egg-free cakes and pastries.

Growth in CDRs, QSRs and their Retail Price Points
There are an estimated 57 foreign restaurant brands across India which is up from 43 foreign brands in 2013. The brands operate around 3,460 outlets across India which is also up significantly from 1,900 outlets in 2013. The number of home-grown chains is also rising as Indian firms adopt franchising or chain models to meet growing consumer demand for the dining-out experience. International QSRs continue entering India to tap the opportunities the sector presents. New fast food brands seen in the market since the past report include: Krispy Kreme, Burger King, Fatburger, Johnny Rockets, and Wendy’s. Sources report numerous other chains are scheduled to open outlets this year; including Carl’s Jr. Brands already present are expanding their reach to tier-two and tier-three cities. According to industry reports, an average middle class household in tier-two and tier-three cities spends about $85 (INR 5,200) per month.

QSR’s have their presence in different formats such as dine-in, food courts in malls and drive-ins at highway rest areas which has provided customers easy access to these restaurants. QSR menu item prices range from $1.50 (INR100) $8.00 (INR 500). Some international QSRs are able to offer items for prices as low as 50 cents which attracts some of the population demographics to indulge a small bite and relax at the establishment with friends or to take a break. Many domestic players such as Nirula’s, Kaati Zone, and Tibb’s also attract consumers by offering menus at affordable prices.

Coffee/Tea Chains and Ice Cream Parlors on the Rise

The café culture is growing steadily in India. There is a growing young, well-travelled, section of Indian consumers that are seen following the international culture of a morning coffee and driving to work with a travel cup of coffee. Domestic and international brands offer coffee or tea with sandwiches, cookies, and muffins for on-the-go consumers. Tea lounges have followed this trend and now offer a variety of teas with food items. It is now common for business meetings to take place at coffee shops and tea lounges, as well. Major international brands like Starbucks and The Coffee Bean & Tea Leaf compete with domestic brands like Café Coffee Day and Barista. McDonald’s also entered into cafés by launching the McCafé brand in India and is expanding the number of its outlets.

Ice cream parlors are also on the rise. International brands like Baskin Robbins, Häagen-Dazs, and Unilever’s Heartbrand line (e.g., Magnum) are expanding within metro cities like New Delhi, Mumbai, Chennai, Bangalore and Kolkata. In 2013, Mini Melts entered the India market through the city of Bangalore. Another emerging trend is the rise of frozen yoghurt parlors in India. Pinkberry, Red Mango, KiwiKiss and Yogurberry are some of the players who are expanding their operations while sources report that Cherry Berry frozen yogurt is seeking an Indian franchisee.

Online and Restaurant Finder Portals

Online portals are gaining momentum and tapping into the opportunities the QSR and CDR sector present. These portals have a tie-up with restaurants and provide consumers with a choice of foods under one roof. Consumers are provided first hand review and feedback by other customers on the listed restaurants and the menu items.

Through some of these portals, consumers can order online and pay by credit or debit card and by cash-on-delivery. Also, many QSR and CDR chains allow ordering food online from restaurants which sources report is increasingly popular with consumers. Consumers can place orders  and have food delivered to their door step at a preferred time and, occasionally, at discounted rates.

Sector Challenges

According to industry contacts, launching CDRs or QSRs involves sizeable investment in logistics and the cold chain. Many establishments also face high space rental and energy costs. Additionally, many brands report recruiting and retaining the “right” talent is an industry-wide challenge.

According to studies by India’s National Diabetes, Obesity and Cholesterol Foundation, obesity rates are showing a marked upward trend in adults and children. The Foundation attributes this largely to consumption of fast food and low levels of physical activity. There is increasing emphasis on diet and nutrition with weight loss campaigns in print media and on television. There is also increased focus on consumers’ awareness of eating healthy and some QSRs and CDRs have shifted menus to healthier options like grilled items. Additionally, some QSRs have started introducing additional choice on menus, like multi-grain and organic breads.

Disclaimer: This report attempts to catalogue the current foreign and Indian restaurant chains operating in India. Two lists follow, the first is a listing of international chains operating in India and the second is a listing of Indian restaurant chains. It is likely that certain restaurants have been overlooked, but the intent is to give readers a general overview of scale and breadth of the expansion in the quick service and casual dining sectors in the recent years.
